Pavol Jozef Šafárik University in Košice (UPJŠ) is one of the oldest and most established universities in Slovakia, with a long tradition of higher education and research. Today, it is a research-oriented university with five faculties covering a broad range of disciplines, including medicine, science, law, public administration, and arts. An important part of the university's mission is the preparation of future teachers. In particular, the Faculty of Science and the Faculty of Arts provide teacher education programmes, including programmes preparing teachers of mathematics. The Faculty of Science offers mathematics in combination with several other subjects, including subjects offered by the Faculty of Arts. Through its long-standing tradition of teacher education, UPJŠ has played an important role in the preparation of teachers in the Košice region. Many mathematics teachers working in schools across the region are graduates of UPJŠ, creating a strong connection between the university, schools, and the regional mathematics education community.
